Flying slightly under the radar, a recent Foreign Agents Registration Act (FARA) filing revealed a digital advertising campaign by Israel using geofencing technology to target churchgoers in several U.S. states.

Jimmy and guest Ian Carroll explain that geofencing allows organizations to track cell phone activity within specific areas to deliver customized messages or advertisements. They highlight concerns the practice raises about digital privacy, data collection, and the use of targeted influence campaigns by foreign or domestic actors. The hosts conclude by expressing worries about online censorship, media ownership, and the balance between free speech and information control.

Is there any part of America and Americans' lives that Israel is not spying, violating, cheating, stealing, harassing?
